

The Place of Women and the LGBTQI+ Community in Sport

Women have long been absent and under-represented in sport, an exclusively male and stereotyped field. It takes time to achieve equality in terms of wages, representations and participation, especially in the LGBTQI+ community. However, some improvements have been made despite some issues remaining important to be resolved.

Women are under-represented, discriminated and earn less money than men

Mediatization of female sports

- On TV: between 16% and 20% on every channel
- In newspaper articles: between 5% and 10%

Discriminations on sportive performances and physical look:

- Stereotypes
- Sexist language or judgemental comments

Football: the most publicised but most unequal sport in terms of wages

Norway: agreement in 2017 between the female and male captains on equal pay (around €300,000 per year).

Australia: agreement in 2019 on an equal minimum wage. Increase of 33% of the women wage (around €10,100 per month).

France: no professional league for women (around €2,500 and €3,000 per month).

The UK: women receive an average of £26,752 a year. Men are paid an average of £2.64m (99 times).

LGBTQI+ people find difficulties to participate in sports

80% of people experienced or witnessed homophobia or transphobia in sport

Less participation of LGBTQI+ people in sport because of:

The Olympic Games: a field dominated by a masculine and straight trend and perception despite some improvements

44% of women participated at the OG of London, and for the 1st time women competed in every sport of the OG programme

2012

172 athletes participating in the OG of Tokyo are openly gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender or non-binary. LGBTQI+ athletes won 33 medals.

2020

The goal of the OG of Paris, achieving perfect equality between men and women participants.
